

High School SSAA Honor Choir: Dr. Jennifer Sengin

Jennifer Sengin is the Raymond R. Neevel/Missouri Professor of Choral Music and Director of Choral Studies at the University of Missouri–Kansas City Conservatory, where she leads the graduate choral conducting program and conducts the Conservatory Singers. In addition to her ensemble work, she teaches graduate courses in choral conducting and literature and is deeply committed to mentoring emerging conductors. Her students have gone on to secure professional positions, gain admission to leading graduate programs, present at conferences, and participate in prestigious conducting masterclasses. In 2024, she was honored with the inaugural Newcomer Award from the Missouri Choral Directors Association.

Previously, Dr. Sengin served as Associate Director of Choral Activities at Georgia State University. There, she led the Treble Choir to national recognition, including first place in The American Prize, while earning second place in conducting. The ensemble was invited to perform at major conferences, including the National Collegiate Choral Organization and the Georgia Music Educators Association. She also received two university-wide honors for excellence in teaching and faculty achievement.

An active guest conductor, clinician, and presenter, Dr. Sengin regularly works with honor choirs across the United States. Recent and upcoming engagements include all-state and regional ensembles nationwide, as well as an upcoming performance at Carnegie Hall. Internationally engaged, she has led workshops in Ireland and Germany and presented at the International Society for Music Education World Conference. She serves on the NCCO National Board and sings with the professional ensemble mirabai.
